Outline Description	Chapel dedicated to St Martin of Tours
Property Description	The existing chapel, which is reached through a small rectangular parvis, was built in 1684, and had replaced an older medieval chapel. The façade of this chapel is rather austere and plain, with a slightly slanting roof and a small centrally placed bell-cot headed by a triangular pediment which is a misfit with the style of the facade. The façade is characterised by a rectangular doorway, which is headed by a protruding plain cornice. A small centrally placed oculus is set beneath the belfry. Set on the right hand side of the doorway is a plaque inscribed with 'Non Gode l'Immunita Ecclesiae'. The small chapel is flanked on either side by a small rectangular wing, which are clearly a recent offensive addition to the building.
